The prevalence of Helicobacter pylori is higher in duodenal ulcer patients than in normal subjects. The peptide YY (PYY) is a hormone released mainly from endocrine cells of the gut, and when administered peripherally, it can modulate gastric secretion and inhibit gastric acid secretion. In order to clarify the physiological role of this peptide in the pathogenesis of gastritis, we used Northern analysis to investigate PYY mRNA expression in gastric mucosa and in gastric lesions of patients with chronic gastritis. PYY mRNA was detected in the gastric mucosa of all biopsy specimens of patients with normal gastric mucosa. In the antrum, mucosa samples from patients with normal gastric mucosa showed significantly higher PYY mRNA levels than samples from antrum with inflammatory cells or from patients with chronic gastritis. In the corpus, PYY mRNA levels were also significantly higher in patients with chronic gastritis than in those with normal gastric mucosa. Regarding gastric lesions, PYY mRNA was highly expressed in gastric muc
