To estimate the national cost of substance use disorders (SU), with particular attention to the costs associated with SU. Data from the 1997 and 2000 National Health Interview Surveys were combined with data from the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA) to estimate the percentage of the noninstitutionalized US population diagnosed as having SU. Expenditures in public and private institutions associated with SU treatment were obtained from the SAMHSA database. The prevalence of treatment was calculated from the percentage of those with SU receiving treatment. Total expenditures were inflated to 1998 dollars, and per capita expenditures were adjusted to a standard population. The estimated national cost of SU was $153.5 billion in 1997 dollars. Of these costs, $64.0 billion were for those having SU; $84.5 billion were for those not having SU. The estimated ratio of total costs for SU ($64.0 billion) to costs for nondrug abuse ($84.5 billion) was 1.42. Of all SU-related costs, $20.2 billion were for treatment and $30.9 billion for substance-related medical conditions. The estimated national cost of SU in 1997 dollars is $153.5 billion. This analysis showed a greater proportion of expenditures attributable to SU among those not having SU and among those who received outpatient treatment for SU. Flood finished 14-21 in his second season at Rutgers and failed to win a bowl game, becoming just the second coach in program history to lose 10 or more games in a single season. The move ended a rough offseason for the program, which endured multiple bowl game cancellations and an independent investigation by the NCAA that helped lead to the firing of football athletic director Tim Perneti. Barchi did not say why Flood was fired, but he praised Flood's ability to build a football program. "I want to thank Coach Flood for his hard work and effort on behalf of Rutgers University in leading our football team to a 6-win season and bringing pride to The State House, Monmouth, and the entire state of New Jersey," Barchi said in a statement. "I had the great pleasure of working with him on many
