I have these two classes: public class Node { public int x; public int y; public String name; public int count; } public class MapProjector implements Mappable { public Node createNode() { Node n = new Node(); n.x = x; n.y = y; n.name = name; n.count = count; return n; } @Override public Node map(Node node) { node.x = x; node.y = y; return node; } public String getName() { return name; } } Node is basically a square. MapProjector has a method called map that does the actual work. Suppose that Node has a method called getArea, and that it should return the area of the Node in square units. I'd like to call getArea on a Node in MapProjector.map, so is that possible? A: Technically, you should be able to do this. The difficulty is that you'd need to make sure that MapProjector has a method of
