It's working great without any issue (user and token). Now I have added a feature to use the same app in 2 different pages, so I have a landing page with heroku that uses the local, and a page for the same app without heroku. The goal is to authenticate once the user is logged in on the main page, but I don't want to redirect the user to the login page if the user is already logged in on the landing page. For now, what I have done is to redirect the user to the landing page when the log in page is requested, before the user is redirected to the landing page (the pages share the same route). When a user is authenticated, i save the user token in the session (session) and redirect the user to the landing page (the landing page uses this token to identify that the user is logged in). I have the feeling that this is not very secure, I have searched on the internet but I can't find anything. Here is the code of the controller for the login page: exports.login = function(req, res) { var err = null; var user = null; passport.authenticate('local-login', function(err, user, info) { console.log(info); if (err) { res.status(500).send({ message: 'Authentication failed', error: err }); } else { if (req.user.local.first
