A: Comparing Delphi with C++ Builder 10.2 allows not just the usual code discrepancies to look through. You can also do Pascal-Delphi interop: a function declared in one file could have its prototype defined in a companion (or even ".cpp") file. See this example. Q: Which pattern is better in C++17 -- constexpr or const? I wonder if constexpr is better in C++17 than const. can we have just constexpr? A: constexpr is "better" than const, because it can appear in other contexts as well, not just in compile-time code. Example for better: When you invoke a constexpr function or member of a constexpr type, it is used as a compile-time constant if it can be determined at compile time (using constexpr if appropriate). However, if it is not a compile-time constant, you still get the effect: a hard-to-find static error will result if it can't be determined at compile time. Example for const: const applied to a variable or a function only has meaning at compile time, and it is used to control the type of the value, and/or optimize the performance of the program.
