Nevertheless, these are all good reasons for not choosing V. ----- gtCameron Seems like an unfair discussion that Google has been unfairly singled out by the author. "Google should not have to pay developers for monetizing their apps," he writes. "Like Facebook or Twitter, apps live and die by the whims of the developer community, and at Google Play you're technically free to distribute any app of any sort you want." Facebook and Twitter aren't paying $30/month for features/developers, they're giving 90-100% of the revenue to the developers. If the developer makes anything less than what they can make elsewhere, they get nothing. ~~~ cromwellian Netflix is really adding a lot of value for $8/month. I have a Roku that I use as an OTA streaming device with Netflix, the Chromecast, and the Android TV adb remote for browsing the Netflix queue and programming guide, search, etc. ----- andrewmuir This article makes some good points about the challenges of becoming a web app maker, but it's also missing the key point: Google no longer lets you import existing web content into their Play store: [ you...](
