If you are not taking appropriate steps to check the originality of your content, you might end up losing a lot of money and readership. Different plagiarism checkers are available online, but free solutions may have some quirks and bugs. In this article, we will cover how you can check plagiarism using Google Docs, without having to pay for the services of an online application. How To Check Plagiarism In Google Docs: 1. Open a Google Docs document and select the text to be checked. 2. Go to the Compare Documents tab and click Compare. 3. Copy the result of the plagiarism check to a different location on your computer or you can simply save it to a folder. Google Docs is an excellent free tool to check the originality of content online. It's one of the best tools available online because you don't have to install any additional programs to perform the check. However, the application has a few quirks, like the fact that it may not detect small, lowercase words like "My" or "My." If you don't want to copy the result of the plagiarism check to a different location, you can create a shortcut of it. Open the Google Docs editor and click the More tab. Then, open the Shortcuts tab and click the Create New Shortcut link. This will open the box that allows you to set a destination for the shortcut. Note: Depending on your browser settings, you may see an authentication request when you click the link. If so, you will have to provide your Google username and password to complete the process. How to Check Plagiarism In Google Docs: 1. Go to the Sources tab and select your document. 2. In the search bar, write the name of your source document. 3. In the text area, type the

Keymacro is a lightweight and simple freeware that enables users to open multiple files simultaneously at the touch of a single keyboard shortcut. How this app functions The main benefit of using Keymacro is the ability to open multiple files simultaneously, which can prove handy for writers who need to work on several documents at once. You can also open and edit multiple files from one location, so it will help you to save time by not having to use your mouse all the time. You can set your keyboard shortcuts to open the files you usually work on the most. If you work on a different file each day, you can even set that to be the default. Other settings include the font, size, color, opacity and alignment of the text you type into the documents. What is nice about Keymacro is that you can open the documents you want to work on at the same time, but they can be saved separately on your computer, so you won't have to worry about using up too much space on your hard drive. If you don't want to use an additional keyboard, you can also open multiple documents using just your Windows taskbar, by dragging and dropping the files into their own folder. Other settings are available for that as well. Tweak the settings for more features As you can see, Keymacro is a very simple and effective application. You can find it at the website bellow: In conclusion, Keymacro is an excellent tool for working with multiple files. It is simple to use and it is a pleasure to use, but the developer should add some additional features to make it even more efficient. Those who have worked with Office 2010 may have a problem when they try to open Microsoft Word documents that contain macros. In such instances, Microsoft Word refuses to open the document because it identifies the presence of macros in the document. Fortunately, there are a number of ways you can enable macros in Microsoft Word 2010. The easiest way is to use a third-party macro editor. Many of these editors are freeware, while others are paid programs. Macros that work in such an editor can be saved as an XML document and directly uploaded to Office 2010. If that sounds like too much work, you can always consider using Microsoft's own macro recorder, which is included in the Office system. Its purpose is to record the actions of the user as he or she types text into 77a5ca646e
