I am applying for a long-term visa for a business trip. I am an experienced traveler and know the language well, with only a few spelling mistakes. Now I'm wondering if I should be scared of the visa officer being suspicious if I enter lots of non-trivial text into the visa form or if they know that many people use Google Translate, Babbel and other tools to translate big parts of text. I have mostly worked with English so I only need to write about my professional experience and personal life. I am applying from

Q: Plugin for making a whole list of Sublime Text snippets available? I love the snippets feature in Sublime Text. I have a fair amount of code for unit testing, and I have a snippet to insert a mock of the test environment every time I start a test. I find myself wishing I could access that snippet every time I start a test. Is there a plugin that will allow me to dump all my snippets to a file and have them available for each new file I open? I don't care about being able to share a snippet between multiple projects in multiple machines. I just want a way to make it easy to create, load and use snippets.

A: I'm pretty sure you can create a snippet with the user key bindings system. So you would be able to create some kind of keyword set. Then you would load that set into a package somehow and have it load on startup. This can be done as easy as creating a file in the Packages/User and put your snippets into that. Obviously you would have to backup your existing snippets. I am just not aware of how to archive them. Then you would be able to set your user key bindings to load the package in any file.

On neuroimaging, a cyst with a cystic and cerebro-spinal fluid (CSF) signal was found in the pontine cistern. Surgical resection of the cyst confirmed that it originated from the pons and caused his clinical symptoms. The cyst was characterized by its contrast enhancement on MRI and histopathologic examination.
