A: Your tokens are not glued to the bridge. They are not a safety feature. They are just stickers that sit in between the finials. They were there before the bridge existed, and they will likely be there after the bridge is removed. Nelsonians are a bit odd when it comes to the matter of safety. As a rule, they prefer to look at your specific situation and tell you how you should approach it. Perhaps if someone were to fall and the bridge was in the way of rescue, something would be done to correct that. Follow Hollywood Unlocked Hollywood to NY with the Black List The Black List is a great resource for writers, actors and film and television executives. As the consulting firm puts it, the list is "the most exclusive club in Hollywood". But how did the Black List get started? Well, you might have heard about the emergence of the Black List, thanks to a highly successful pitch by Aaron Sorkin, to prevent the network from cancelling The West Wing. The list would have given the network an excellent idea of which projects they should fund. The idea of a list of script concepts that are too edgy for a major network is such an obvious thing. As it stands, the Black List is the preeminent marker for new projects, whether on the big or small screen. It scores projects, with editors and agents keen to see which projects will make it on to the next level. The Black List gets projects and services, like screenplay readings, from a number of high profile, and semi-high profile, authors. One of the other services that the Black List provides is the script feedback. The list gets readings for script concepts but most of the time, the list is the exclusive list for script feedback on a project. It's usually screened in New York, but it is also mailed to the writers or executive. The reason why it is mailed to the writers or executive is that the writers have a better idea of what else is being written, and they can judge for themselves what they think the other projects are. Here's where the Black List really shines. If a writer or executive works with the script and gives a negative feedback, it is unlikely that they will be the only person to know. The writer knows about it
