What's new in Cossanox:

-in-1 Scatter Gun I was really looking forward to this one, and then when it arrived I was a little surprised - I assumed they'd gone ahead with something else. The product is no toy, but the damage starts with the instructions and a lot of product dye not mentioned with over 400 words of brand statements (see the sidebar for the gross and detailed ingredients). Top product picture is nicely finished, i.e. skin has a slight yellow tinge and it does change the temperature of the item in my hands, though not too hot or cold, i.e. what is claimed on the box. The outside of the box is nice matt stucco, and I LOVE the colour tones which are a nice touch. What's inside however - the cooler, brighter colours of the last product, are contrasted with the finish of the outer blue cardboard with the scribbled logo embossed in white. The inside of the box (front & back covers) are plastic and not cardboard. Both also have the Cartoon Network logo. The gun itself is quite nicely finished in five different colours. Three of the colours (green, pink and grey) leave some strong metallic finish, but the black seems to have been reduced down to the plastic moulding. The trigger is a low profile spring loaded button. It feels sturdy and responds very well to input. One nice touch is the nice little rubber stops as you open and close the flip-up cover with the trigger, small vises, which prevent the gun from slipping too far and also help to regulate the extension of the cover. The gun is pretty complete; everything is as it should be (plans included.) One thing that surprised me - I had expected that the starting button would be recessed within the body, but it is on the little plastic lip of the flip-up cover - it seems to be very stiff and a little uncomfortable when looking straight down, but as you can see from the pictures it only takes one flick of the thumb and prevents the cover from opening. The idea for the toys is simple - the projectiles break up into five different colours so that you don't jam the gun and need to clear the by-products (pink or green) out. A little selectivity doesn't seem to be necessary as the gun works very well at its slow speed of two clicks per pull. It's designed as a 'scatter gun' for children and (I presume)
