Corporations and country armies fighting to out compete each other. ~~~ kfrzcode So saying having a single currency is a good thing doesn't work. There are countries that have currency controls on certain trade items and it hasn't wrecked their economies. ----- strikelaserclaw I guess getting rid of the E-dollar would also be a good idea, but that is a lot different than returning to a gold standard, the gold standard didn't allow for this kind of floating economy, the E-dollar is pretty much the American gold standard, but I dont think the money supply goes up or down over night as the currency is in the majority in the system. And the E-dollar doesn't have the same kind of influence on our economy as the dollar does in its pure form. ~~~ zarothe Gold standard is not what you need here. Just force the Fed and Treasury to keep tracking the gold/dollar ratio, by mandating that their balance sheet must be backed 100% in gold. The supply is irrelevant to this if they are not allowed to store it. It is a form of deficit spending in the reverse, where the government creates money and spends it. It's only a problem if those dollars aren't worth what it claims it is! The only real thing you need to do with a gold standard is make sure that there is indeed a reserve, you don't need to have a gold standard, reserve or not. ----- gammateam > He warned that Trump, though an "honorary chairman" of the committee, > should not get involved in its deliberations, though the president "can in > fact be called as a witness bff6bb2d33
