

The team responsible for creating the new standard of interactive gameplay, visual effects and player personalities came for the first time to the world. The day after "GDC," FIFA 17 was released worldwide and a month later, FIFA 18 was released in November. "HyperMotion Technology" in FIFA 22 captures all the complexities of real-life football play on the pitch in hyper realistic detail, which delivers an amazingly realistic experience. It was the kind of experience that was completely impossible in previous FIFA titles, and we have brought it to the entire sport in the most meaningful way vet." The results are already clear - virtually no player can tell where the ball will be when they kick or pass the ball into a goalmouth. Its real-world counterparts, who are humans and have been in motion capture suits for years, are still as agile and rapid as ever. As players reach for the ball, they are allowed to fake, as they naturally do when reacting to the speed of the ball. And every single real-life movement by a player, even the facial expressions, can be replicated in video game form. Real players are still faster and more athletic than their virtual versions. If a player scores a goal, he experiences real "awesome," because the FIFA player does, too, when the crowd goes wild and the ball bounces back into play in real life. It is not a simulation any longer - it is as real as it gets. The use of real-life player movement data has also lead to numerous gameplay improvements, including customizations by players such as goalkeepers, box-to-box midfielders, attackers, backs and strikers. At the same time, player DNA has been replicated in the experience of every fan in the stadium. "As a gamer, I am absolutely blown away by what we have been able to do with the new 'HyperMotion Technology'." said Jordan Ayew, Co-Founder and CEO of Two4Three. "I was amazed by the energy from the players when I was able to run around in the suits and kick a ball. The speed and fluidity is absolutely incredible, and the reaction time from where the players kick, pass, pass, shoot, sprint, dribble and finally catch a ball is near the real thing. It is
