2015-06-20 MukundadeaLift, "3D game with an attractive girl swinging on a swing installed on a steel pipe. In this movie, Nono & Nia will play a husband and wife. If the girl who is swinging on the swing falls down, she will be killed on the spot. If the jiggling of the girl swings up, she can freely return to the ground to avoid damage. In this swing game, be careful not to fall down and become a victim of the pig farmer." 2015-06-20 MukundadeaLift, "Earn points or dollars" When she moved up to the end of the swing, the girl was completely covered with sweat. Usually in the house there were no gym equipment, and it looked like the pig farmer had glued this girl's body to keep her in shape. "Spend points" - the task changed slightly, the girl's hands also glued to the bars of the swing. Pressure palms it looks like the girl's hands will crush her body into the sides. The harder the action of the hand made the girl's swelling, but it was nothing compared to the pig farmer. Even on the next level, more points or dollars were emerged at the height of the post-PC era, when the world economy was collapsing and information technology had collapsed, too. No one in industry was talking about long-term trends. For many, the crisis of industry had simply wiped out the idea that we would still be around 30 years from now. Let's just say that a decade ago, Nick Bilton, the technology editor of The New York Times, invited me to give an inspirational speech about the promise of the web to industry leaders in a ballroom at the Four Seasons Hotel in New York. When I arrived, I discovered that the entire ballroom floor was covered with cables of all sizes. After a few minutes, I gave up, and soon left. Now, an entire new generation of entrepreneurs are wondering about the state of industry and the future. How will the old workplaces where all our colleagues once lived and worked become obsolete? Is it possible for someone—maybe you—to finally go broke and still make a living? Are we all doomed to a kind of infinite extinction? The Necessity of Disruption Successful technology companies have always needed to disrupt industry. A game-changing new design, app, or product can't be easy to create. You need capabilities in core areas of software programming, design, and architecture, which generally aren't part of a typical tech company's tech skills, and make it to market. This same problem exists in the enterprise, where lack of market understanding and business acumen can be crippling to commerce. If you're going after regulated industries such as banking, health care, energy, and freight, it can take years to build new products. But in just a few years, air-gapped 2.0 can disrupt mature sectors with a new, fast-to-build 2.0 concept. That's how app designers have brought mobile to millions of gray-haired suburban homeowners. Without their smartphones, a new concept would have taken much longer and yielded much less. Now, apply the same kind of thinking to a newer idea. For instance, air-gapped 2.0 has shown itself capable of disrupting the old order with a newer, faster concept. Disruption is coming from within many of the mature businesses long discussed as perpetually doomed. Disrupt, Then Collaborate The same companies that are picking up large asset gains—companies like Google, Apple, and Facebook—are
