Punchout 2 was later ported to the Sega Genesis under the title Punchout 2: Heart of Stone. Gameplay In the game, the player fights against four robot opponents on a boxing ring. The game has four main areas, with each area featuring five rounds, and the round can be played in either 1-on-1 mode or 2-on-2 mode. In 1-on-1 mode, the player can only fight against one opponent at once. In 2-on-2 mode, the player can fight against two opponents at once. Every time the player wins, he receives a gold medal. If the player loses, he receives a bronze medal. If the player loses two consecutive times, then he will lose a part of his boxing clothing. There are several parts in the game including gloves, boxing boots, boxing trunks, boxing pants, gloves and boxing shoes. Every part has its own color. For example, a boxers' gloves are red, so when the opponent's gloves touch them, the gloves will turn into red. Reception The game was met with negative criticism upon its release, with Total! claiming that "Punchout 2 is a total disappointment, offering nothing new." It was followed by a sequel, Punchout 3, released around the same time. References Category:1990 video games Category
