Links to the game: Bitbucket repo: The game consists of three parts: Part 1 - Voxelgram Part 2 - The Workshop Part 3 - The Crazyhouse What's the difference? A generator converts a PNG to Voxelgram. The generator builds a random puzzle, and you are given 5D shapes to make parts of the puzzle fit together. The solver is the backend of the game, where you have access to all puzzles from Voxelgram, and with the help of a Workshop, thousands of puzzles, dioramas, tools, and a bunch of other cool stuff. The Crazyhouse is a level editor that lets you build your own levels with any shape, and share it with the community. You can use the same skeleton for all parts of Voxelgram, or you can have individual ones. This doesn't affect the gameplay itself, but if you'd like to make a map for the game, you have to pay for $20 for the full package, but if you have part 1 and part 3, you just have to buy for $12. Voxelgram requires unity. Desktop: free (with ads) iOS: free (with ads) Android: free (with ads) Windows Phone: free (with ads) 3D mesh models are pretty much only supported on desktop right now. The models can be exported to Unity, but Unity needs to be installed first. It uses blender internally to create the models, so you can export directly to it if you want. The free version is just a dummy and works the same as the

Chapter 10: Hero and Villain Aki Aki was a Buddhist monk who always walked in circles. He always stood motionless and closed his eyes. Aki would look at the crowd of people moving around the ceremony and prostrate himself. The monk's prayer would speed through the crowd as he moved his eyes along the path. Some of the people would get to him and kneel. Some of them would not dare to to do so. Some of them would watch him in awe. He would receive a few donations. He would take the money out of his apron and return it to the donor. In return, he would give them some information. Sometimes they would not take it. In those cases, he would exclaim 'good luck in your next life!'. He did this every day for three years. This made Aki strong and gave him conviction. He was not afraid of death. On the contrary, he wasn't afraid of life either. When he reached the city, he decided to take up citizenship. He was going to do something worthwhile with his life. He decided to work with his fists and use his brains. He would use his lifestyle to give comfort to people. He decided that he would be an adventurer, a hero, a vigilante, a savior, a first aider, a healer, a knight of justice… Actually, he would be a pretty legendary hero. Aki was done with the unnecessary stuff. He passed the licensing exam with ease. When he had applied for a job offer, he got an offer he could not refuse. He had just received a letter containing the details of the job offer. And he had just received it when fire broke out inside the building he was in. As the fire spread, Aki covered his face with his hands and prayed out loud. He was not alone. Almost every person, who was observing the fire, was kneeling in front of him. They were praying and calling others to pray. However, the police was not there. It was as if they had all gone home for the day. 'What have we done to our world?' Aki cursed himself. 'What have we done? What have we done to this world? The people are there. However, they lack the skills to save them. The people do not care about the things happening around them. The things called civilization… No, civilization is just a
