
Image Processing Software Option Fujitsu Serial

Fujitsu is a large manufacturer of document scanners and other products. The 2-D image processors have been previously known as Multi-Function Peripherals (MFP), Multi-Function Printer (MFP) and Fax&Scan. Products based on the FUJITSU ISIS R380 image processor are amongst the most popular in the market. These are based on the FUJITSU ISIS R380 image processor. The Express Scanner EAN reader is a 2D image processor based on the FUJITSU ISIS R380 image processor. It is a document scanner with an integrated EAN barcode reader. This product is available in a single USB A-Type interface only.

Q: How does a Gallent.php OOP file interact with a CI install? I have a site that uses Gallent. It had been installed with a CI install. I want to convert to using a custom PHP class called Gallent.php, but the concept of CI has more than a few quirks that may cause problems. Let me explain how I'm currently doing the file setup: My Gallent.php is in my /application directory with some other files. All files are owned by my user so I get no permissions denied errors. That's good. I've created a Gallent.php.myclass file and loaded it into my CMS, but it's not pulling in the files from the original install properly. My Gallent.php file is calling the respective install file with the right file and directory information:

$this->load->helper('form');
$this->load->helper('image_lib'); require_once APPLICATION_PATH.
'../application/locales/'. $this->_language.'/'. $this->_language.'.php';
require_once APPLICATION_PATH.'../application/functions/Gallent.php';
require_once APPLICATION_PATH.
'../application/functions/Gallent.myclass.php'; require_once
APPLICATION_PATH.'../application/functions/Gallent.mysize.php';

The locales file gets successfully loaded. The functions file is pulling in fine. But the Gallent.myclass file isn't pulling in any of the classes from the Gallent.php install. Am I missing something? Is there a CI configuration I'm not setting? A:
