Rainbow Six Siege Reveals $6.1 Million Year-Over-Year Growth So far, Ubisoft's downloadable title has surged past Call of Duty and Far Cry into fourth place. Rainbow Six Siege has had a relatively quiet start to its life, with only a few titles launched so far and nothing related to the sequel to last year's hit Tom Clancy's The Division. Well, that's all about to change, with the developer today revealing that its latest tactical shooter has broken all-time download numbers in the first 24 hours of its availability. The game, which launched globally on PC, PlayStation 4 and Xbox One yesterday, has far surpassed all its predecessors in terms of first-day revenue, according to Ubisoft's financial results published today (via MCV). So far, the game has generated $6.1 million in revenue, which is a 90 percent increase over Rainbow Six Patriots' $5.2 million and Rainbow Six Vegas' $3.7 million in the same period. The game has also surpassed Call of Duty's seven-year-old Black Ops III's first-day sales by 45 percent (revenues of $6.5 million), and Far Cry 4's (revenues of $4.3 million) by 13 percent. While it will still take a while to reach its full potential, these figures are a great sign for the game, which ended 2015 with just $28 million in worldwide revenue. However, the game has quickly been closing in on Ubisoft's console juggernaut Rainbow Six: Patriots, which sold $25.8 million in its first week in 2014. The good news is that it appears the game is following Patriots' footsteps by attracting a mostly male audience. The data shows that more than 80 percent of the game's first-day sales were due to male players, with just 20 percent of those being female. For reference, Far Cry 4 had a mix of 45 percent female and 55 percent male
