A: There's lots of us out here with the same question, same support email. I already got an answer from Delcam, that they will fix this in the next release. Fibroblast growth factor (FGF-2) protects the rat optic nerve against ischemic damage. We have previously shown that basic fibroblast growth factor (bFGF) has a neuroprotective effect in rat optic nerve (ON) trauma. The aim of the present study was to investigate the effect of FGF-2 on the ON injury induced by anterior ischemic optic neuropathy (AION) in the rat. Animals were divided into three groups: sham-operated (group I), FGF-2 treated (group II) and untreated (group III). AION was induced unilaterally in rats by the ligation of the superior ophthalmic vein, the ligated side being the treated one. In group II the rat eyes were treated with bFGF from the day before the surgery and the treatment was repeated three times a week for 2 weeks. Our results show that the bFGF-treated eyes have a significant protection against loss of visual acuity and ON degeneration. In group III, however, although the bFGF-treated rat ONs showed a significant protection against the AION-induced injury, the ONs were not differentiated from the contralateral ONs and the animals lost their visual function.

Jurors in the trial of former Los Angeles police Officer Noe Ramirez have reached a verdict in the case, but cannot immediately be released because a federal appeals court has put a hold on the verdict. Ramirez, a veteran officer, was on duty in South Los Angeles the night he fatally shot Antonio Criss, 26, in August 2014. On Tuesday, jurors reached a split verdict on the most serious felony charges against Ramirez, finding him not guilty of first-degree murder and guilty of involuntary manslaughter for killing Criss. Officer Noe Ramirez (right) was acquitted on first-degree murder and involuntary manslaughter charges, but convicted of being drunk on duty in a death-suicide. (Los Angeles Times) Ramirez was found guilty of involuntary manslaughter for a shooting that occurred during a 2012 auto accident in North Hollywood. He was acquitted of being drunk on duty and possession of an excessive ammunition clip. The jury was deliberating for about eight hours before returning Tuesday afternoon with a guilty verdict on involuntary manslaughter
