* Although Photoshop has been around for a long time, it still remains the industry standard for editing and manipulation of photographs and other raster images. There are plenty of resources that teach Photoshop online, as well as free demo versions of Photoshop available online that you can try out. You can also purchase a Photoshop trial CD from the company at `www.adobe.com`. * Photoshop is covered extensively in Photoshop CS6 For Dummies, by Matthew Schuh (Wiley). * While you can do all the editing you need to do with Photoshop on your computer, you can also upgrade to a portable version that you can take with you (or bring into the studio) that includes your Photoshop files so you can work on them on the go, as well as any completed files you've made. * If you're interested in photography, I recommend purchasing Photoshop Elements, which is a consumer version of Photoshop that does not come with any photography specific tools (that are part of Photoshop) but offers a drag-and-drop interface that enables you to edit images. For the complete professional, I also recommend the Adobe Creative Suite, which includes Photoshop, Lightroom, InDesign, Illustrator, and so on, for both consumers and professionals. You can also check out the web page `*` Even though Photoshop is called "by the numbers," you can really do almost anything you want with it, and it's really a powerful tool for almost any type of image processing and manipulation. ## Sharing on the Web Perhaps the number one bottleneck in the broadcast industry is that there aren't enough people who know how to do web design. The average person is busy doing his own work and doesn't have the time to read the manuals and tutorials that come with the software. He finds himself totally overwhelmed. He needs someone to walk him through things step by step. If you have the time, you're probably the person who can help him get up to speed. As I mention earlier, you probably have a website, which you've been working on for many months. Think of this new tool like building a website. You need to know how to use it effectively and efficiently to get the information out fast and reliably for your customers. (And you probably also need to have a few other things in place so you can achieve that.) In this section, I describe how you can create a website that you can sell through

Q: Allow different users to access different folders from same server- Windows Azure I am creating a simple website on windows Azure and I want to store certain files only for certain users. I know this can be done by giving a different directory to each user, but is there a way of doing this using the same directory. A: You could create a virtual directory on the Azure site where your different users can access their own folders from. Something along these lines may help. Or the three different options in this article - Q: How can I return multiple values using NSURLConnection I am just curious, I was expecting one of these to return a single value instead of multiple... `[[NSURLConnection alloc] initWithRequest:[NSURLRequest requestWithURL:someURL] delegate:nil];` and `[[NSURLConnection alloc] initWithRequest:[NSURLRequest requestWithURL:someURL] delegate:nil];` Both the above return the same value. Any idea why? A: HTTP requests are stateless.
