I'm not 100% sure but I think a lot of this can be found in the New Riders Group forums here: That's where lots of people go if they have questions, there's often an answer or at least a lot of discussion. The other question you asked can probably be answered here: There's a bunch of people who talk about bike computers and different units, etc, and whether they're a good idea. I've not had a smart trainer (yet!) but I'd look there for more info. THREE people were rushed to hospital after being shot in Monash suburb of Melbourne. Police said the group suffered multiple gunshot wounds and it's believed they were targeted. The incident occurred at 4.20pm on Kyman Street near Toorak Road in Melbourne's north-east. Two men aged 30 and 33 and a woman aged 38 were taken to hospital in a serious condition. It's believed the shooting took place in a house and a car was also hit by the gunfire. Homicide squad detectives have raided the house and will remain at the scene today. Inspector Paul Moody said: "This is an isolated incident that took place on Kyman Street in the Kymana-Toorak area in Melbourne's east." "It is believed three people were targeted and have been rushed to hospital. "One of those injured has life-threatening injuries and I can tell you the offender is still at large." Anyone with information is urged to contact Crime Stoppers on 1800 333 000.

Q: Time interval in which the delta of the a variable increases or decreases Is there a way to get a set of data from which I can find the interval in which a variable's delta (from one value to next) increases or decreases. For instance, if I have the value 25 and then 20 and a delta which is
