Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an ultrasound apparatus, and more particularly to an ultrasound apparatus for transmitting ultrasound into a body tissue and receiving reflected ultrasound waves reflected by an object within the body tissue, and more particularly to an ultrasound apparatus of the type adapted to transmit ultrasound from a vibrator into a body tissue, and receive the ultrasound wave reflected by the object within the body tissue. 2. Description of the Prior Art In the case of diagnosis of a disease, such as a liver disease, by using an ultrasound apparatus, the ultrasound waves are transmitted into the body tissue from a transducer provided at the end of an ultrasound probe by a vibrator to make the ultrasound waves converge into a focal point, and the echo wave reflected by the object within the body tissue is received by the transducer from which it is amplified and subjected to analog/digital (A/D) conversion, thereby creating an ultrasonic image of the object which can be displayed on a display unit. The ultrasonic image is analyzed based on information obtained by performing differentiation and integration with respect to the echo signal received. For example, in the case of analysis of blood flow, the blood vessel in the body tissue is imaged in a tomographic manner. The body tissue is normally surrounded by air, and therefore an ultrasonic image can not be produced without taking into account a phenomenon that the ultrasonic wave is absorbed in the air and the reflected echo signal in an incident direction is attenuated. ca3bfb1094
