The Legend of Rustwalker We are the Rustwalker Clan, the descendants of a long line of assassins. We are a family of skilled killers, and we have taken no part in the petty squabbles that disrupted the clans during those dark times. Now we live in the lands above the only mountains that reach beyond the realm of death. Lying a thousand feet deep in the earth, the only places where an assassin can truly be safe. Nourished by the lush grasses and the sweet scent of the few remaining apple orchards, we thrive in the peace, and allow no disturbing thoughts of the past. We are the descendants of a long line of assassins. You join this family. Set in Chicago, an abandoned house in the furthest reaches of the suburbs, set in an eerie and twisted setting. The playable character is a man who experiences mysterious glitches in his reality, eventually unraveling the nature of his life and sanity. As he searches for his lost loved one, he finds an underground shelter, a comfortable living spot for those who dwell in the city. The game is made to be played in 2D. A full controller/joystick is available. Visuals: The game has a low-resolution character and a comic-style environment. Music: Various composer music and sound, based on the game's status Audio: Various music and sound Funding: Development is made by a single developer. I am funding development myself. Idea I wrote this concept as an internal blog post, while I was at university. At the time I thought it would be a good fit for the site, so I're-released' it a couple of times. I feel the game is ready for the wider audience, so that's what this blog post is about. Story An alternative, though similar, introduction. The game's story revolves around a man whose partner has left him, and slowly his sanity begins to wane. Uncovering a terror that will reveal the truth to his daughter's message, he tries to go back through memories only to hurt himself in the process. As he enters a life he no longer remembers, he discovers a series of corridors and rooms that help him understand his situation. Eventually he will find the truth behind his situation, which is tied to a supernatural theme. Gameplay A pixelated screen, where the player controls the main character. Swipe left/right to move and tilt up/down to control. Inventory items are found in real life or other characters, as the player must interact with objects in the environment, in order to save them. The player can possess objects in other characters, either to control them or just to get them out of the way. Gameplay involves a lot of searching, and using items to change the status or perspective of the environment. Inventory items Investigate and break a door with a screwdriver to get inside. Discover other items, each with a different function (like a remote or a mirror). Attack and interact with the environment or people (as necessary), to get the items you require. The c9d1549cdd

Roll of the dice: Each of the 5 continents is divided into 10 squares, and a random city on each continent is selected. A tile depicting the selected city is drawn. AI NPC's: Each continent is populated by a number of automated tanks, which appear randomly at various locations. The game starts with the player controlling one of the randomly selected islands. The city square and nearby tiles depict the city that was drawn. Note that if a city was not chosen at the start of the game, the player will still have a battle with two random tanks. Each tile depicts a street, building, or other feature. Only the tiles that belong to a city the player selected at the start of the game are active. The player's infantry can be sent to attack enemy tanks and reach the squares where the enemy tanks will appear. To attack tanks, the player can either send his infantry units directly into battle, or use up a special ammunition and start the attack. Once a city is attacked by an army unit, the unit is trapped there. Enemy attacks can also lead to enemy aircraft taking off. It is possible to end a city siege early by alerting the planes defending the city. The planes can be used to destroy the attacking army unit, or to locate and attack a hidden enemy unit or tank. The game is turn-based. The player's turn consists of taking one of three actions on the map: Constructing buildings. Attacking enemy units. Attacking enemy tanks. The number of construction, attack, and battle squares for each city are predetermined. Each time the player builds a new building, the city will be marked as "no longer available for construction". Buildings that have been destroyed, damaged, or are obsolete can also no longer be constructed. Most towns will not be available for construction until the player controls the entire continent. However, certain towns may be available earlier, as the number of available buildings per continent depends on the city's condition, such as the strength of the inhabitants, or proximity to the water. Attacking units Attacking infantry is the most common method of attacking enemy units, tanks, and enemy planes. Infantry units can be sent in three directions. One or more directions can be selected for each unit. Infantry units can be divided into groups. A group is a unit with a particular formation and strength, selected at the start of a battle. Different infantry formations can be selected for battle and different groups can be sent
