“Here at EA SPORTS, we’re always pushing ourselves to do things that feel new and fresh,” said senior gameplay designer Peter Moore. “While developing this year’s game, we’ve been attempting to create the most physical and immersive football game to date. This year, we’ve introduced dynamic sublimation technology to the pitch, which drives the climatic changes in the pitches. We’ve also introduced ‘HyperMotion Technology,’ which builds off real-life player movements. By using real player movements in addition to the reflective animation systems, we’re able to recreate incredible accuracy in the player movements.” The football field will host the most detailed pitch technology ever seen in a football game. Improvements to the crowd management feature are expected to bring multiple crowds onto the game field for each matchday in the new addition to FIFA’s global partnership with the English FA. “A football match is a great spectacle that fans enjoy watching at home or on the move,” said John McVay, general secretary of the English FA. “Modern technology has enabled fans to share the game with more people across the globe, whether they’re watching at home or on the go. We’re excited to see the next generation of football in FIFA 22.” “We’ve been working on this for a number of years, getting our engineers up and running with the game and including it in FIFA 21,” added Moore. “We’re thrilled to go one step further this year, bringing the feel of real football to the pitch.” An all-new take on playing cards, including a variety of ground-breaking features, will improve the game’s overall design and experience. Along with his career as a senior designer at EA SPORTS, Moore is also a UEFA Champions League football referee with his own technology and tournament creation company, Referee Labs. He worked as a Technical Director on FIFA 18, first as a FIFA World Cup 2018 partner and then in early development of FIFA 17. “We want to empower the players with the ability to know as much about the game as the people who actually play it,” Moore said. “We’ve been able to do a lot of game-changing technology in this game with the majority of the game technologies centered around

Features Key:

- World football returns with “HyperMotion Technology,” the next evolution in gameplay capture that captures all the real-life movements of a football match using advanced motion tracking (5K).
- The all-new First Touch Control (FTC) system provides more realistic passing controls and, as players improve their skills on the ball, change the way they play. Players can be more aggressive on the ball and dictate play than before.
- We have taken the game forward with more ways to progress in the Player Career, but we also add a more deep and engaging Signature Moments mode that allows you to play the game through one player’s story, live out their footballing journey. Develop as a player, rise from the lower leagues as a manager, or celebrate an iconic moment in your career all the way to the pinnacle.
- Off the ball and players put greater pressure on the opposition goalkeeper by introducing a revolutionary off-the-ball engine that combines crowdsourced data and motion capture data to create dynamic off-the-ball movements. New Camera/Video Engine brings dynamic visuals to every FIFA game for the first time. Improvements in player recovery, the Foul Touch Engine, and all-new Dribbling & Direct Control improve attacking and defending.
- Reign victorious over & conquer all in all-new Co-Op and Online Seasons, we introduce the Ability Draft, and 14-a-side and 16-a-side modes.
