What's new in Hooligan Vasja: Halloween:

Genius Greedy Mouse is a bronze sculpture consisting of a full-sized stuffed Woolly Mammoth called Rocky Graystone, and a two foot tall bronze skeleton named Ger This is the last work I put up before my stay in the US on cruise, which sadly, has ended. I put it up yesterday and had some live passengers look at the two headless cadavers and it still has the plumbing for light and water. I picked it up today at 9:00 am, re-folded it into the manila and got it down to the airport at 12:30 pm. I just have to get used to the clock difference, and I just don't care. I get up at 6:30am because of the hour, and I don't care if I get up at 12:30 and it is 0630. As long as I get up, I am happy. Last night I put it up by 12:30am and my friends suggest I get a refund. The thing is in their terms and conditions it says you have to contact the Model Studios, but they refuse the refund. Since my friend has the same problem as mine, but when she gets it done, she gets a full refund, I guess I should let mine get a refund too. I don't see why they won't do it. I can understand if they are trying to scam people, and when they find out they won't get a refund and are forced to reimburse me in their terms and conditions, that is BS. I haven't gotten back to them yet though. They are trying to charge a service charge from 12-5am, but have told me that they do no cleaning during that time, and that is the reason for the charge. Why do they keep sending the cleaning people to roll the cabinets around the beds? Is it hard to clean the cabinets with them? They keep trying to overcharge me, $10.50 for putting the light up, it should have been 5.00. They wanted me to pay them to shut off the lamps. I put the lights back on the 14th, and they tried to say I didn't. They also try to charge $10.50 for 20 minutes of work. What? They should pay the bills first. I agree that the records and computers are a little frustrating with the time, but I also add in the changes

Markets & Markets Intelligence, a business intelligence analytics start-up based in Islamabad, says the country's leading schools of Islamic thought - Dar-us-Salaam and Jamia Hamdard - now call for the scrapping of the practice of female religious congregations. It says the fatwa calls for the exclusion of women from inter-faith prayers, which allow the group to read the entire Koran, and from Islamic sermons and other religious classes. The fatwa has formal legal standing within Pakistani society because Islamic seminary bodies and civil courts convene these rulings, which have been around for centuries. After the fatwa was circulated in 2017, women who had been attending prayers in and around the cities of Multan, Kasur and Jhelum found their female companions not allowed to attend either.
