Partial duplication of the GJB2 gene causing Möbius syndrome associated with clinical and radiological features of Charcot-Marie-Tooth disease. Möbius syndrome is a heterogeneous disorder characterized by congenital diaphragmatic and/or facial nerve palsy. Only two cases of Möbius syndrome associated with a mild recessive Charcot-Marie-Tooth (CMT) phenotype have previously been reported. We report a family in which the affected members were demonstrated to be compound heterozygous for a novel mutation in the connexin 32 gene (GJB2) leading to Möbius syndrome in one, and a p.R143W point mutation associated with CMT1E in the other. Analysis of blood samples obtained from the mother of the proband showed that in her blood, cDNA carrying the p.R143W mutation, together with cDNA of the normal allele, is present. Moreover, the proband's blood was shown to contain a small amount of normal connexin 32-containing gap junctions between nerves, and connexin 32-containing gap junctions were also found between Schwann cells in the proband's sural nerve. In the sural nerve of the proband, several nerve fibers were found to contain elevated levels of connexin 32. These findings suggest that the GJB2 mutation in the proband is associated with a partial duplication of connexin 32.IDBI Bank has closed an additional 5.9 million rupees ($78,000) worth of unsecured term loans for distressed properties By May 13 - 12:00AM IDBI Bank has closed an additional 5.9 million rupees ($78,000) worth of unsecured term loans for distressed properties, raising its three-month total to Rs 4.46 billion and its 2019 target to Rs 500 billion from Rs 400 billion. "The biggest factor driving real estate in the markets is the activity in the information technology (IT) space because IT companies are borrowing big money to expand to other sectors as well," said Anand J
