You could be subject to debtor's prison. Say you retire, sell your home in Florida and move back to California. Great. You lived in Riverside until you got the sale and move. After your sale, you didn't go into Riverside. Now you want to buy a new house there. Well, Riverside, not knowing you had moved, legally considers your Florida residence your primary residence and files a "protective" exemption on it. This will bar you from ever buying a new home and eliminates any forced sale. There are several ways that this can happen to you. Some non-bankruptcy professionals advise their clients to list their Florida home at a price high enough to allow them to "buy" it, not sell it. That way, they'll avoid paying "exemption" or homestead fees. The problem is that when you sell, Riverside will take a portion of your sale proceeds for homestead tax. Other non-bankrupt
